

A severely disabled friend and her special needs Black Labrador retriever are required to travel almost constantly by air in order that she may maintain contact with the various farflung operations under her care. Her business does not yield enough profit for her to begin paying for her canine companion as well as herself. Yet she is helpless without the dog. Clearly her economic future is endangered by this proposed legislation. OST-2004-19482-9